Details: 6 years ago Jason Marks stepped away from a budding music career as a back up singer/guitarist with the NC based band Far Too Jones (Disney/Mammoth records) and joined the U.S. Navy as a diver. Jason Marks was released from military service due to a diving related injury and made his way back to Wilmington, NC. After trying to get settled into a new career in marketing Jason still found himself passionate about writing and performing music. 20th of June 2005 marked the release of Whiskey would be risky.....Jason's first solo release since 1994. The album has already been compared to the likes of Chris Isaac, Lyle Lovett and Dwight Yoakam. The collection marks a departure from the modern rock style of Far Too Jones and definitely displays Jason's love and appreciation for many styles of music. Radio air-play is expected to start in Wilmington and Raleigh markets by the end of July 2005 and is accompanied by Jason doing acoustic performances throughout NC, SC, VA and CA. Jason Marks was born in Napa, California and grew up between southern California with his father and VA Beach where his mother currently resides. He came to Wilmington in 1989 for a movie audition and liked the town so much he returned 18 months later to attend UNCW. His music career began out of a necessity for work which at the time was hard to find, so he took out a small loan and bought a PA and guitar and started performing locally during college. And as they say "the rest is history". jasonmarks.net
