Letting go in the climax of a great song, listening to people singing together, it's a feeling that goes deep. It's something about everyone being of one mind, one Spirit. I studied choral music in college to help me figure it out, but the mystery of choral music still awes me to this day. I have a passion for worshipping God with music. I lead worship around the Memphis area, and I am one of the worship leaders at Heartsong Church. I have been a featured singer and choir director on a couple Crossway Worship Band CD's as well as a Proto CD recorded at Ardent Studios. After Dana Key coached me in songwriting for a few months, and I found my place in the world of music, I became serious about writing songs. I write a lot of songs, and I write a lot of lyrics. I stay up way too late for my own good trying to decide whether love and move will be okay to rhyme. I am addicted to rhymes...I love writing about that which I love: Jesus, love and life, my beautiful wife and my soon to be child...reaching the unreached, sorrow and happiness, things of earth that grow strangely dim in the light of God, and helping people get through their struggles. I work at a treatment center providing music, art, and recreational therapy. I am one of the first people to bring Drum Therapy to Memphis. I lead a group called The Memphis Rhythm Symphony. Getting a circle of Djembe's together is just as amazing as choral music. Put the two together, and I can only imagine. In everything I do, I'm a family advocate. I had a rocky childhood, but holding on to family reaped its benefits...I love chilling with my brother Erik...chatting about music and art, I love hearing my sister sing, I love building stuff with my dad...especially our relationship, and I love sitting down to some of mom's home cooking with a side of wisdom. I love making my wife laugh, and I can't wait to be my child's hero. Yeah, Family is it...the built in relationship system that teaches you how to love selflessly. It must have been a setup from upstairs. Listen World, Hold on to family, even if you think you don't need them, they may need you one day, and that's what love is, isn't it?
