Arranging Irish, English and Scottish folksongs has been popular for centuries among classical composers, including Haydn and Beethoven. The songs on this recording were arranged by British composers who, at the turn of the 20th century, collected as many of the folksongs of the British Isles that they could find in an effort to preserve them. Each song is unique in style, coming from musically distinct regions of Ireland. With their strong, touching lyrics and grand melodies, the songs are an open canvas for expression. Most were originally sung in Gaelic, but have since been set to poetry in English. Herbert Hughes made his mark with his four-volume set of Irish Country Songs published from 1909 to 1936, and many of the arrangements on this recording are his. Also included are arrangements by Cecil Sharpe and others. Robin Hendrix performs and records classical vocal works and traditional songs.
