I knew at that moment, I had to learn how to do exactly what was being done to me: move the soul with song. And that was the beginning. Shortly after her musical awakening, Anna penned her first song and started showcasing her powerful alto at local Chicago open mics. "She can deliver a husky approximation of Dolly Parton in one breath and shift into deep soul belting in the next," wrote Peter Margasak of the Chicago Reader. Encouraged by fellow songwriters and musicians, she formed her first band, Anaboy, in 1995. After some changes in the bands line-up, Anna Fermin's Trigger Gospel was born. In the spring of 1997, the band recorded and debuted its first, self-titled EP with Mark Dube at Playtime Studios in Boston. By December of that same year, the band was opening for the late, great Johnny Cash at the House of Blues Chicago. Since then, Anna and her band has shared the stage with an impressive roster of musicians including Steve Earle, Neko Case, Robbie Fulks, Paula Cole, Delbert McClinton, and many more. Each album she released has been received with critical acclaim. Her voice remains a strong and vibrant presence in Chicago's music scene and abroad. Now, inspired by new life experiences, Anna continues to weave a rich brocade of musical stories with melodies that leave you wanting more. Tags: pop
