Trinidad Tripoli, Invaders, Casablanca, Desperados, Syncopators, and Crossfire were the steel bands that pierced high frequency melodies in his brain. In the streets of Brooklyn, he was introduced to reggae and hiphop, the music of the teenage generation that was pumping the sound sets of Crown Heights and Flatbush. Brooklyn's West Indian Day Parade which happens once a year on Labor Day, is where he had his first go at "chatting" which is a Jamaican form of rhyming. He was introduced and pressured into rhyming by his first bredrin Nasty Ness, when coming to the states. Sean Nicholas Thomas started out as the Pink Panther during the late 80's in New York City as a dance hall artist performing at many different venues such as Biltmore Ballroom, Tilden Ballroom, and in the Radisson Hotel in New Jersey. A strong and powerful stage show performance with his unique vocal styling is how he controls crowds. In the late 90's he was christened "Bless" by his grandmother after being wounded by a gunshot to the mouth. Streatz aka "Bless" accomplishments in the recording industry include "Make U Wet " with Black Street in 1995. He was also a featured artist with Sean Paul and Kardinal Offishall on the Clipse "Grindin" Selector Remix, which went Gold. This was his first major accreditation in the United States. Streatz is a force to be reckoned with. Look for his album "Caution" to be released shortly.
