Sah Sex Pleek Songs Details: ASCAP's 1998 emerging-songwriting beloved singer/songwriter/guitarist Chris Alastair is a Gen-X acoustical Pete Townshend for the new millennium, the velveteen revolutionary, the rebel with a caustic wit, the Jesus-lookalike preaching a way-out gospel of groove-laden acoustical pop/rock. The successor to Chris's sold-out debut album "Ghost in Love," "SAH SEX PLEEK" was recorded in eight days at Trackmaster Studios (Ani DiFranco, Goo Goo Dolls) in Buffalo, New York, with a full band. As usual, the genre-busting, award-winning singer/songwriter holds down the lead vocals and rhythm guitars on the disc's 11 tunes. "SAH SEX PLEEK" is a phrase Chris picked up during a recent debauched binge in Montreal, but whose meaning must remain closely guarded for six months or else, uh, our lips will fall off. Its true meaning is very deep and mystical, but we also figure that, like Chris's songs, it can be enjoyed on a variety of levels. "On SAH SEX PLEEK, Chris is Jackson Browne recast as a hip '90s songsmith la Elliot Smith. Some wild arrangements, expansive production and unexpected turns of phrase. Heads up!" John Dallam, President, Missing Link Publishing "Chris Alastair is a great talent, and the songs on SAH SEX PLEEK are expressive soundscapes backdrops to his obviously adventurous life. He's got a winning combination of great pop melodies and a unique personal feel....He definitely lives in his own spaceship travelling at warp speed!" Teddy Kumpel, producer/songwriter/guitarist (Michelle Lewis, Chris Barron)
