Forgotten times, of an earlier epoch in ones life. These moments became memories buried deep in the recesses of the mind. On listening to Warren's album, they bubbled to the surface. The 90's ambient electronica provided the soundtrack to many of our foundation years. Warren manages to plot the genre succinctly, yet gives it a fresh perspective which ignites the spirit of yesteryears The textural aural landscapes of the album reflect Warren's musical experimentation and progression; documenting time, environment and emotion - from melancholic melodies, to revelatory ethereal ambience to gritty glitchy beats that induce that sacred zone." - Paul Finn, BBC Radio Music Biographical note: Pete Warren (London, UK) has been making music for nearly 20 years in a variety of styles. He spent the early years experimenting with effects units, tape recorders, 8-bit computer noises, intercoms, electric guitar and a basic synthesizer, producing noisy lo-fi experimental industrial music. This gritty sound evolved into an atmospheric, textural and melodic electronica. Although he mainly records for himself, Pete Warren has also produced music for the BBC.
