A beautiful, bittersweet album of lullabies about cities, full of warmth, longing, violins, and fuzzy beats. 12 MP3 Songs ELECTRONIC: Folktronic, POP: Dream Pop Show all album songs: The Hum of the Electric Air! Songs Details: Punk Planet says this about The Hum of the Electric Air!: "Bear with me for a moment and put on your imagination cap. Imagine that you're leaving the home of a person who makes your heart go pitter-pat. It's a brisk moonless night, and your footsteps go crunch crunch on a bed of fresh fallen snow. The orange glow of the streetlights cast a warm tone on the falling snowflakes, and for a moment it seems as though there are tiny stars coming to kiss you on the nose. The One AM Radio is the sound of this scene. It's important to give you this visual image, because it's too easy otherwise to write this off as a dime-a-dozen "boy with acoustic guitar" project. These songs are far more beautiful and emotive than that. The soft guitar melodies and the singer's gentle tenor, violin harmonies -- they all blend together to create a gentle-yet-not-snoozy sound. Even though these are simple songs with only a few instruments, they use each sound to its fullest. The album is generally slow or mid-tempo, but it remains lilting, lively and lovely. Passivity is barely an option in listening to this record; its every groove puts a hold on the heart."
