Bizarre, Unusual Novel in the erotic genre with lesbian overtones and a Nazi backdrop: The news order wasn't exactly what Helga Stern anticipated when the Imperial Order recruited her. She was told that the Imperial Order's idea of a new order was to make America a better place for those whose roots were totally pure. Pure was a matter of definition. The Imperial Order's definition was a takeoff on that of Germany of the 1930s, where anyone disagreeing with it was dealt with harshly. Cruelly. Without regard to anything that Helga thought of as civilized. She should know. Her parents survived the horrors of Nazi Germany and emigrated to America. They survived because they kept quiet about what they saw happening. They turned their heads. They never forgot the elixir of power however. They had brought their own story to the ears of their daughter. They told her how it was better to ignore the plights of their neighbors in Stuttgart. How to ignore the knocks on the doors of their neighbors at the darkest hours of night. How to close their ears to the screams of those taken in the night. Helga's father, Richter, was an area warden in the early years of the war. He supervised the comings and goings of the area assigned to him by the Oberstormkapitan for the southern part of the city. He never told Helga how much he participated in the terror of the Reich. She found out after he had died. She was rummaging through his old steamer trunk in the attic, getting ready to sort out Richter's old clothing and the memories of a very long life. She came upon some faded photographs locked in an old style diary. While the photographs were faded, the indelible expressions on them were etched forever in Helga's mind. They were pictures of Helga's mother, wearing the dreaded deaths head insignia of the SS. Leafing through the stack of faded memories, more and more of her mother's background was revealed. One photograph was a group photo showing Fraulein Stern in front of the Ravensbruck camp. Her blond hair and Nordic looks were prominent. Helga's mother had been a strikingly beautiful woman in a country that prized the pure Aryan look more than any other. The women surrounding Fraulein Stern were all dressed in the same uniform as her mother. In front of the group, a naked woman, her head shaved, was kneeling with her head bowed in the dirt. Her arms and wrists were bound behind her back. Around her neck was a crudely lettered sign which said in German: I am a lesbian whore criminal. Punish me while I eat more pussy. The cruel smiles on the guards showed their obvious enjoyment at the prisoners torment.
