These triggers are the stressful events that happen in life and everybody deals with them differently. Some people respond negatively to them while others are able to ignore them. Those individuals who ignore these issues are often not hearing the messages in between and this is what separates the mentally ill mind from the normal mind. The mentally ill mind tends to absorb everything in life that is said. Someone who is mentally ill hears it all and they let all of that process in their brains until it begins to cause confusion. The normal mind tends to only listen to what it wants to listen to and therefore these people do not have the conflicting thoughts that cause mental confusion. Much more information about mental illness, its causes, its symptoms and its effects is available in my Disorders of the Brain: A Guide to Mental Illness ebook. This ebook is designed to serve as your guide to various mental illnesses and to assist you in understanding the various diagnosis and mental health problems that are common today.
