The fabled "guitar whistle" that made noted Ennio Morricone's "A Fistful of Dollars" in a totally new mark for a fantastical b-movie that crosses warriorlike arts and spaghetti western. 26 MP3 Songs EASY LISTENING: Lounge, COUNTRY: Western Trinity Goes East Songs Details: His name is legend: the whistle and guitar from "A fistful of dollars", the vocalize of the crazy "Mah'na Mah'na", composed by Piero Umiliani. His name is associated to those of Ennio Morricone, of vocalist Edda Dell'Orso and the "Cantori Moderni" ("Modern Singers"), the choir that accompanys the maestro in soundtrack performances but also in arrangements for Italian pop music hits in the 1960s. Multi-instrumentist, one of the few sitar players on the Italian scene, performs several Morricone soundtracks, from "Le foto proibite di una signora perbene / Forbidden photos of a lady above suspicion" to "Vergogna Schifosi / The Dirty Angels". His filmography seems endless, with dozens of titles ranging from spaghetti western to erotic movies and Italian comedy. In the last few years, several of his compositions have been reissued, from "El Puro" to "Suor Omicidi/Lo Strangolatore di Vienna/Lady Frankenstein" plus various single tracks appeared in compilation albums. Recently he recorded this totally new mark for a fantastical b-movie that crosses warriorlike arts and spaghetti western, published by Hexacord!
