Addicted to the soaring skies, brash high-flier Arthur Edward "Jack" Ratigan returns to Britain to fly bombers when his birth country goes to war against Germany in World War II. It also means a return to his ancestral home of Pren Redyn House in Wales-and risking his career and freedom if it comes to light that he is homosexual. The drama and peril of combat will create profound changes in Jack both during and after the war, as will the influence of Ifan Griffith, the young butler at Pren Redyn and the one person who seems immune to the Ratigan charm. The sky has always been Jack's true love, but when he faces a future of never flying again, he'll discover he's already found a surprising new home for his heart-with Ifan.
