"Imagine Les Claypool, Trent Reznor and Fiona Apple dropping acid and taking a U-haul truck full of instruments you've never heard of to Frank Zappa's house to record an album." Mike Gianakos, High Times Magazine. 15 MP3 Songs ELECTRONIC: Experimental, ROCK: Progressive Rock Details: This is the debut album for No Use for Humans as a trio. Through years of researching the possibilities of sound, both acoustically and electronically, all over the wastelands of planet earth, three West Nile survivors developed their own brand of something that might be called music. Although this music is difficult to categorize, there are recognizable elements of all forms of music. Because this music is a result of experimentation with multi-instrumentation and things which produce sound, Life has been created from Nothingness. This is why the particular trio has named itself No Use For Humans. Theologians believe that the two humans derived the name from their hatred of the human race. Some believe that the so-called duo came up with the name because they couldn't work in bands with other people or vice-versa. Others just think they have a sick sense of humor or maybe they're just plain sick. Either way, live shows have been described as "seeing two guys on stage but hearing twenty". In the music's most simplistic state, No Use For Humans is a movie for your ears, a very bizarre movie. Progressive math rock rhythms, haunting melodies, multi-ethnic, multi-genre beauty, unbearable sorrow, and sonic annihilation. Something for artsy-fartsies, metal heads, hippies, punkers, jazz snobs, and teeny boppers....well, maybe not...but your Mom would like them. You will love them.
