Details: The DNB We strive to bring our thoughts and ambitions into 3 minutes of music, one track at a time, and if its a bad thought ..well think again!. Vocalist/Guitarist Dougie Niemans often has a hard time sticking his tunes into a genre, but luckily bassist Rylan Sigglekow is nearby. Niemans lyrics are often in line with Jim Morrisons, yet the music he writes and we create are more in line with, Wait, dont plant a seed for em!, Niemans interrupts. Its an odd marriage (The DNBs music) adds Drummer Thom Theroux. The DNB has just released its 2nd album, which just so happens to be a double album. The debut, 2005s Fame Loathing, contained 8 acoustic pop tracks, 3 spoken word weird-ass tracks, and 1 (whispering) secret song. The album was a solo venture for Niemans, who had just left the rock group Stone Pony. Along the way he added Sigglekow on drums for live shows. As the production increased, Thom Theroux was added to complete the hat trick. So Sigglekow moved to bass, and Thom sat behind the kit. The exciting part is that both can play either, so they usually take advantage of that throughout the set Niemans chimes in. Ive never had that problem before, its great, really adds to the show!. So, anyways Christmas 2008 found the band performing at the release party for The DNB 2 : Factory People/Famous Last Words. Disc 1 (Factory People) is 16 tracks (1hr) of layered pop/rock/acoustic songs. Fresh, catchy, thought-provoking! Disc 2 (Famous Last Words) is 16 tracks (45min) of abstract poetry/spoken word set to original, often trippy music. Sigglekow asks Has there ever been an indie album released in this manner, of this magnitude?. I mean, come on, a double album?.. Poetry?. Its a ballsy thing to do, I dont recall (a double album) of importance since the Smashing Pumpkins Niemans explains. But I had a lot I wanted to do, so it was time to release the hounds. The band is a tight unit, all friends growing up, who have worked together in the past but never together as 3. Niemans and Theroux formed The Rubbers in 2006, and recorded a 9 track album with Hugh Dillon of Headstones fame producing. It was a great experience being out in Kingston (Ontario) at the Tragically Hips Studio (The Bathhouse where they spent 8 days recording), livin the dream with Hugh at the board, says Theroux. Niemans also recorded 2 albums with Stone Pony between 2001 and 2005, and during that time Siggles filled in on the skins for a year. Its beginning to sound like a good old Canadian rock story isnt it? Niemans asks and laughs, Everytime you get a new group of guys, or record something new, you figure youve hit the nail on the head. But nothing of great worth receives perfection, without first encountering error, and with that being said, I think this time weve found it. Read all you want, but in the end its what you hear and see that makes music..music The DNB Dougie Niemans -vocals guitar- Rylan Siggles Bass- Thom Theroux Drums- Tags: pop
