Jazz and world music for kids of all ages about Green Renewable Energy. 15 MP3 Songs KIDS/FAMILY: General Children's Music, KIDS/FAMILY: Educational Details: This Earth Day, Kids Learn How to Save the Planet with the Pied Piper of Jazz, Hayes Greenfield MUSIC FOR A GREEN PLANET He cares about our youth and therefore our future. He performs with such heart. Herbie Hancock The Pied Piper of Jazz. Philip Glass "Catch the man who's making jazz cool for kids." New York magazine Music for a Green Planet brings green-minded parents and their children a compilation of jazzy tunes full of positive messages about living green. The music is sure to inspire little ones to love the Earth, while parents will appreciate the (non-annoying!) adaptation of well-known childrens melodies. Perfect for road trips when parents are looking for music that is calming and inspirational. --Cristina Acosta, Co-Founder, Green Mom Finds Saving the planet was never so much fun! Parents need to know that this album is full of joyful and witty jazz tunes that celebrate the environment and every human being's part in saving it. music -- Amy Weaver Dorning - Common Sense.Com Almost Makes Me Wish I Had Kids This CD is exactly the kind of music I would put on the radio for my kids if I had any. Hayes Greenfield essentially took old classics like "she's coming 'round the mountain", set them to some great jazz riffs, and altered the words slightly so that all the songs have a great sustainable message. Rock on Hayes! -- Adam W. SustainLane.com New York Hayes Greenfield, acclaimed jazz musician and creator of the multi-award-winning Jazz-A-Ma-Tazz CD and music education program, will release a brand new collection of jazz-infused Green tunes, just in time for Earth Day. Music for a Green Planet will be available April 22nd wherever great family music CDs are sold. Featuring 15 original tracks that explore the myriad ways everyone can work together to save our Earth, Music for a Green Planet presents a sampler of musical offerings. From the Dixieland beat on This Little World of Ours, to the beatnik vibes of The Greenable Rap or the bossa nova rhythms of Do

You Know, and even the cool jazz tones of Brahms Green Lullaby, Music for a Green Planet travels through an array of jazz styles with each title based on a familiar childrens song. Environmental activist Margo Schepart co-wrote the clever, punchy, fun lyrics with Greenfield. A host of top singers join Greenfield to create a sophisticated mix of sounds. Jazz legends Joe Lee Wilson, Miles Griffith, and the up-and-coming Melissa Stylianou add their smart vocals to several songs. Eight-year-old Les Miserables star Carly Sonenclar makes memorable Things We Throw Away, and Broadway veteran Shayna Steele (Rent, Hairspray, Jesus Christ Superstar; currently in Las Vegas with Bette Midler) performs with seasoned vocalists on gospel-inflected This Little World of Ours and The Sun. A choir of children joins the fun. With Music for a Green Planet I really sought eclectic variety, explains Greenfield. I wanted to express the elastic and communicative qualities of jazz in every song, which is why I included world music elements along with an atypical combination of instruments. On This Green Man (sung to the tune of This Old Man), Sunny Jain, (Jazz-A-Ma-Tazz drummer and band member) masterfully plays a traditional North Indian bhangra or Punjabi- style beat using Indian drums (the dhol and dholki). Adding to the musical arrangements inventiveness are Hayes unique incorporation of instruments rarely heard in a soloist context such as the alto clarinet, the C-Melody, and baritone saxophones. Unusual within a jazz context, he includes acclaimed Dave Phelps lap steel guitar and master keyboardist Charlie Giordano (currently touring with Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band) on accordion. Music for a Green Planet also features colorful performances by the highly regarded jazz pianist David Berkman, eminent Steve Wilson on clarinet, master bassist Jay Anderson, and tuba virtuoso Bob Stewart. This is music that makes you think on a higher level rather than if you were just following along with a three-chord rock groove, Greenfield notes. Greenfield has wanted to record a Green album for some time now. As a world citizen, humanist, and musician who cares about our world, I produced this CD in an effort to make a difference, help increase awareness of our current global emergency, and promote available solutions in our effort to preserve our planet. The songs concern solar power, wind energy, hydro- electric, geothermal, bio fuels, hybrid cars and buying fresh, locally grown organic produce. They give kids ideas about what can be done, he says. Greenfields acclaimed 1998 family music CD Jazz-A-Ma-Tazz, produced by Pop artist Roy Lichtenstein and his wife Dorothy, features vocalists Richie Havens and Miles Griffith. The CD was honored with the Oppenheim Toy Portfolio Gold Award, Child Magazines Best of the Year award, the Publishers Weekly Listen Up award, a Parents Choice award, and the American Library Association

Notable Childrens Recording award. Greenfield is a saxophonist, composer, educator, producer, filmmaker, and bandleader. He has been active on the New York City jazz scene since the late 1970s. He performs regularly and conducts Jazz-A-Ma-Tazz music workshops at schools, theaters, and festivals nationwide. For more information and performance updates, visit musicforagreenplanet.com.
