While working at his chosen career during the week, Terry performed at many Clubs on the weekends, slowly building his music career. Terry was lead singer for a few bands, most notably, Sage, Sapphire and Electric Vision. While with Sage, he was surprised one night, when Johnny Braff of Shower of Tears fame, dropped in at the club where they were performing. He sang a couple of songs with Terry and was very complimentary of what he called Terrys big voice. Over the next couple of years, Terry performed with Jimmy Ray, Derek and Reggie Paul, Michael Thompson and the legendary - world famous pianist, Dennis D'Souza. Terry took a break from the music business when his first child was born and was a spectator to the business until 1999 when he returned to the music scene by releasing a Christmas album.
