Jim Martin was born on June 3, 1980 in New York, NY. Raised by his father Martin (from whom the latter half of his stage name is derived), mother Carmen and older brother Henry - he grew up and went to school for the first years of his life in Forest Hills, Queens. As a result of his parents' divorce in the mid 1980s, he was later encouraged by both his mother and father to take up a hobby on the weekends to help him cope with their separation better, which lead him to begin attending weekly piano classes at a learning facility in Queens when he was 10. Moving out to Long Island with his father a few years later, he switched instructors so he could conveniently resume his lessons at home rather than at the school. Inspired by the classic singer/songwriter records of the early to mid '70s and by modern day hits such as Billy Joel's STORM FRONT in 1989, Martin began taking some vocal lessons in addition to his ongoing piano courses, and subsequently began writing his own material by the age of 16 in 1996. He commenced work on a solo album with renowned music producer recording engineer Steve Young (Queen Latifah, Taylor Dayne, the Good Rats) at Media Recording Studios in Merrick, NY in 2003, resulting in his self-titled debut CD, which was released independently throughout parts of Long Island in June 2004. Martin's biggest musical influences include Joel, The Beatles, Elton John, Pink Floyd, Ben Folds Five, the Rolling Stones, and Queen. He currently lives in East Meadow, NY, and resides seasonally in San Diego, CA, but can be reached by email at info@jimmartinsongs.com. G. Roethel, September 2005
