She wanted to help others realize that the greatness they had been trying to conjure up was there, buried under all the stuff. Her efforts gave birth to her weekly newspaper column, Naked Relationships, which is now represented by Creators Syndicate and running in newspapers all over the country. Denise says that there is nothing she'd rather write about - nothing has more impact on our lives than our relationships. The foundation of our relationships is authenticity, or nakedness; and without it, we're destined to fall short of the love and intimacy we want. She is delighted to offer readers, and listeners, a compass as they find their own way to nakedness, to love, and intimacy. She is the author of Naked Relationships published by Hampton Roads and three other gift books. She conducts workshops and retreats all over the country. And she has accepted an invitation to again serve on the faculty of the prestigious Omega Institute. Denise has lived with her heart and her analytical mind wide open. She has been a good student; and Life has been an incredible teacher. While sharing from a personal perspective, rather than clinical one, she supports it with the best of the leading experts from academia (many of whom endorse her work). And, she does it with the zeal and compassion of one who is still learning. Denise lives in Ormond by the Sea, Florida, where she is in love with life, and ever grateful for the chance to inspire others to know the best of who they are - the best of life and love.
