Details: When first hearing Bob Rylett's "Wings of a Rusty Soul", You are struck by the hot honesty and the cold truth. From one track to the next we are reminded why we love the song as an art form. From one melody to another we are reminded of the past,delicately. From one lyric to another we are brutally awakened to the future. Bob has taken our collective tongues out of our collective cheeks.He shakes the tree and if we fall out, then its our own fault, we just didn't hang on tight enough. Recorded at "The Factory" in Vancouver B.C. on a sunny yet cool summer day this record isn't about effects or posturings. It is not about the modern convenience. It is about the genuine and the hopeful.Its about the cautiously playful. It is about the choice and the decision.It is a bakers dozen of one takes. It doesn't hide. It never lies. And it certainly provides.
