Twenty-four year old Jasmine Johnson is twenty-six weeks pregnant with her second child when the unthinkable happens. Her water breaks. Jasmine is raced to the ER and gives birth to a very sick baby girl whom she names Dianna. It is then she learns the news, her baby would have to be hospitalized for twenty three months due to her medical problems. Time passes and the baby who is now a toddler is ready to be discharged from hospital....only to be apprehended by a Child Protection Agency.... sending Dianna through 23 different foster homes. Based on the true story of Holden's childhood, growing up in foster care and group homes in British Columbia Canada, Holden tells the story of how she was victimized by the caregivers whom were set up to protect her. Holden takes it one step further by addressing the wide span issues of foster care as a whole, and attempts to solve those issues by interviewing Foster Parents, Foster Kids, as well as the head of the child protection system the Minister for Children & Families in British Columbia. Daughter's Choice is an emotional but powerful story of how a child that was abused in care, a child who dated a hijacker, a child who took a gun to a group home ... could turn her life completely around and advocate change and awareness to a very much needed service.
