illustrates the life of our Rock Icon, Craig Canon. We enter his lavished mansion finding an unsettled soul hopelessly struggling with his new found fame. Craig was scarred early when abandoned by his father.
After loosing his mother to illness he feels it is difficult to ever love another for the fear of inevitable loss is too strong. Making strides of accomplishments as a college Art student in Northern California he starts a Melodic Rock band: The Loose Canons along with his fraternal twin brother Lavo. Conflicted, Craig finally discovers the way to hope with help of his love interest Melody. The two frolic in happiness for many years as the audience participates through odes of music that sequence his truest emotions. After marriage, initial success comes easily and abundant to them while living in San Francisco. He launches La Galleria; a successful nightclub serving a posh Silicon Valley crowd. Time goes by and big plans are made for the American dream; a family of their own. Destruction occurs in the form of a fire. Losing his business, loft and original oil paintings is too tragic. The future is unknown and both deal poorly with the situation. Craig attempts to savor the passion for his Art when he tattoos a number of them all over his body one ominous night. Simultaneously, the couple faces further loss as they experience a miscarriage.
Attempting to repair their broken hearts, they conclude they cannot. We follow Craig down a path of pure darkness which leads to spending time in a local tavern. Eventually, he checks himself into the confines of a sanitarium. The result is an enriched ability of writing lyrics. With crisis comes opportunity as he reaches a point of resolution. Turning to his brother Lavo, they make a real effort for stardom into the Rockstar world. Good fortune is the result of his persistence. Craig solidifies his ultimate aspiration within the Southern California OC music scene. We revisit Craig in his beachfront mansion with the world at his feet. This brave new world is still not good enough. Now he realizes that loneliness is his truest companion. His soul mates lost love is gone as a severe depression takes hold for he contemplates drowning his sorrow literally. In a drunken and drugged stupor he walks into the ocean hoping never to walk out.
