Details: Joerg Brunsendorf/ Generation Conflict From a really young age I was taken by euphoric sounds of Electronica which led me to experiment with different sounds from a synthesiser. I studied graphic design at the Technical Economic College (FHTW- Berlin) Germany but after moving to Berlin I wanted to dissect the fundamentals of Electronic music with experimenting with early versions of Cubase to produce my own sounds. With the explosion of the eighties my influences like most were the virgin sounds of Depeche Mode, Human League, Yazoo, Kraftwerk, and Technotronic which still influence my work to a degree today. My sounds are a fusion of many genres as I have been influenced by many great producers. In producing my first EP. I have fused minimal with the early sounds of the eighties to produce a more chilled, cinematic feel. A constant build up of intrinsic sounds capturing the explosive times we live in. My current project titled Crash Test is crafted pieces of metallic sounds intertwined with an organic warm bassline. A clashing if ideas with the notion of an Unknown outcome! Generation Conflict is related to the different styles of music conflicts over the centuries. With new genres created to rebel against the norm enticing and manipulating peoples perceptions and making them feel apart of a warped utopian world where reality does not exist. My evolution as Generation Conflict is to conflict with the set rules of structure and let my sounds and ideas clash and morph like a never ending movie of emotions, violence and the refusal to conform.
