This small town Missouri native believes there is passion in each song that he writes and sings. Jeff says, "I'm not going to sing or write a song that doesn't touch your heart." Jeff started playing guitar at the age of 13 and by the age of 15 was playing in a country band with high school friends. They performed at every venue possible in Missouri. Jeff put his guitar in the case for several years when he enlisted in the army after high school graduation. While stationed in Germany, Jeff met fellow American, Jim Carter, and after a brief discussion about music and a band tryout Jeff joined his band, "Dallas Country Green." The band played 15 to 20 nights per month all over Germany. While in Germany, Jeff released his first album, "Out On The Town." The album was very well received, giving Jeff radio and television airplay in many European countries. It also attracted German talent buyers who booked him on the "Truckers Festivals." These two or three day events featured many performers with audiences of thousands, and Jeff stood out with his talent and being an American singing country music. Jeff gives an energetic show with a command of the stage to an audience that truly listens to his mid-tenor voice. There is audience participation at every performance. Because of his songwriting talent and vocal delivery, the audience reacts to his message - passion and heart. In 1993 Jeff moved to Nashville to pursue his music. Like a lot of singers who come to Music City, Jeff was a little intimidated with the great talent, but he found singing venues and kept writing, honing his craft. Drawing from personal experiences after a divorce in 2001 the song ideas would come and the words would flow, making this point in Jeff's life his most creative time to date. Jeff soon found a small coffee house in nearby Springfield that gave him a place where he could perform his new songs. He became inspired to pen more heartfelt songs and return to the recording studio. His efforts resulted in his new album, "Six String." Jeff has a hit recording in the making with his self-penned song, "Little Soldiers." Early response to this new single record has been tremendous, especially with the military wives. One wife who emailed Jeff says, "My husband is currently in Iraq. We have a three year old daughter. When I hear this song it makes me cry tears of joy, but at the same time tears of sadness." Whether you listen to his album or witness a live performance, you will get his message. You will experience the passion in each song, and Jeff Wade Clark will touch your heart.
