Details: Daphne Denniston is a singer/songwriter currently based in San Diego, California. She has lived and traveled throughout most of North America, and much of the world, and her songs are the stories to prove it. Although her influences span many genres, from blues to rock to reggae to jazz, Daphnes style generally falls under the category of alt-country/Americana. Daphne has been described as a "sultry singer/songwriter with a voice and style that could be the lovechild of an acoustic Lucinda Williams and Bruce Springsteen, with more than a touch of Bob Dylan. She sings of the places and people shes met on the backroads of her life, and her songs never fail to have both the traveled and un-traveled listener alike nodding in appreciation, as any dreamer can relate to her memories of small towns, empty highways, truckstops, garages, dive bars and of course the ever-present theme of lost loves and heartbreak." The 10 songs on her debut album, "Five Dollars or the Truth" are just the tip of the iceberg for Daphne Denniston, who has a live following from Montana to California to Texas to Pennsylvania, with a repertoire of originals that are waiting their turn to make five more strong albums, at least. The title of this debut is from a line in the third song, "Psycho Magnet." While unlike the rest of the songs on the album, which are far more likely to evoke tears than laughter, "Psycho Magnet" has developed a cult following for it's clever staccato lyrics and hilarious portrayal of the crazy people that we all know, and sometimes are.
