Its the introduction of a refreshing new relationship to the pop world. THE RECORDING PROCESS: The concept of the albums recording process was to resurrect the organic and earthy sound of recording artists of the past. It reminds me of Carol Kings Tapestry, is a common place remark from listeners when My Everything is in the CD player. To create this listening room from 1971, all the Albums basic tracks were recorded live using an old reel to reel analog machine. Theses songs were then transferred to digital where the finishing touches were mixed and mastered by Damon Trotta, Sluggos Goon Music, Edison NJ. THE ALBUM SOUND: The feel of the album can't quite be explained by genre, for it encompasses many. Gwyn's delicate piano and beautiful vocals will open your ears to a whole new experience. It becomes a vivid sound-scape, painted through a Chopin-like piano style and the subtle voicing of additional instrumental colors. The album is lyrically urgent, sung with an intensely organic character... one to be noticed and respected. The songs melodic nature, become grounded by the shading and texture of a unique, yet supportive rhythm section. From Jazz to Rock, the percussion plays through a broad spectrum of colors, while the lyrics bring true incarnation to Folk. Add yet a touch of organ, an acoustic guitar and a slide of the petal steel, and a new relationship with music occurs. THE MUSICIANS: Although Gwyn had written and arranged all the original tracks solo, she has found herself in great company. The band rallying around her has quite an extensive resume. These fine musicians have played with such greats as James Cotton, Lenny Kravitz, John Eddies Band, and Bernie Worrell. It is an honor to be among such great talent, Farley says.
