Simon Monserrat masterfully blends the sounds of Caribe, South America, and Africa, with jazz harmonies into a unique and exiting style of Latin jazz and World fusion in this first self produced solo recording. In the African tradition, the Djeli or Griot embodies the culture of his people. The Djeli is a historian, musician, dancer and performer who has the task of reminding the community at large of its traditional greatness, and of the accomplishments of those who have come before. Using the performing arts, the Djeli points out the contributions of each family group, generation by generation, that have contributed to the progress of society. The music is based on afrocarribbean drums, and rythms from instruments such as: Culo puyas, and Quitipl, that comes from the afrovenezuelean music and cultural tradition as well as bat drums from Cuba. Traditional music styles are mixed with new creativity to give birth to this unique and exiting mix of: jazz, afro-beat, blues, latin, danzn, rumba and son. The organic nature of the music of Monserrat creates challenging and intriguing arrangements that are rich with grooves that bouy the journey through music, rich emotions and inspiring lyrics. REVIEWS: "Like Sosa, Monserrat views the various musical offspring of the African diaspora as a common family, and he brings various styles together in unexpected and fresh ways. By stringing together chapters focused around different sounds, Djeli tells a musical story." (Nils Jacobson, All About Jazz) "Top of the world right now!!"
