After moving to Toronto in 2002, the imprint of this musical milieu can still be found within Thane's songwriting. Likened to British sensation Andrew Roachford, Thane's singing style has been described as emotive pop music with rich, earthy, and soulful vocals inspired by such artists as Seal, John Legend, Boyz II Men, Tracey Chapman, Lionel Richie, and Alana Davis. Thane has spent the last several months in the studio recording original material in preparation for his newly released debut album Palace of Love. He has had the privilege of working with a host of accomplished musicians including Steven Roe (lead guitar player for The BitterSweet), Colin Robinson (drummer for FeFe Dobson), Nick Czarnogorski (bass player for Kazzer), and Jake Payne (pianist for Colin Amey). Fatlabs producer, Vikas Kohli, describes Thane's work as "rooted in a strong foundation of what makes a great pop song - one can hear the soul in his voice and the honesty in his lyrics." Thane gained voice training experience through several years of choral performance and, in 1996, won an Alberta Black Achievement Award for Amateur Performing Arts after being nominated by his influential music teacher. Thane continues to study music through private training, actively participates in songwriting workshops, and is a member of The Songwriter's Association of Canada (SAC) and SOCAN.
