This is a fictional novel that centers around four African-Americans who venture into the field of law enforcement for different and various reasons. JOHN WILSON is the eldest of the four who is a thirty-nine year old family man with two kids. He is frustrated with his current job, and has always wanted to be a cop. TRAVIS HENDERSON at twenty four is a gentleman that is young, intelligent, and educated. He also has prior law enforcement experience from another outside agency, and comes from a family where his father was a Police Officer. CLAUDIA ANDERSON is a twenty six year old college graduate who happens to be a very attractive single female with model like qualities. At twenty-one years of age MAURICE SANDERS is the youngest, coolest, and most streetwise of the bunch. He at one time hated the police, and had minor contact with them as a juvenile. The book tracks the four individuals through the hiring process, academy, and work as officers on the street. It tells of the hardships, friendships, relationships, and prejudice encountered during their struggle to make it from rookie status to respectable status in a white dominated environment. Follow them as they travel down their career paths of being police officers on today's mean streets, and learn the true meaning of "brotherhood."
