5 Good Reasons Its A Bad Idea To Try And Self-Manage Affiliate Product Shopping

1. Its Time Consuming - How much time do you think you would have to invest to find 70-100 viable products to choose from so that you can expand what you offer in the marketplace? Do you find yourself running short on time to create your own projects or even personal time to enjoy your life, your family, your hobbies? Even if you are getting emails from product creators you trust, you have to spend time hunting for just the right product to sell and they're never in the same place!
2. Feedback - Its also very hard, once you've found and/or purchased a product, to figure out exactly how and where to sell it, how effective a product it is, just how exactly you should market it. Do you turn to the author? Google it and search through other people's reviews? Again, time consuming and hard to find the answers you're looking for.
3. Packaging You may be a whiz at packaging a PLR product, but unless you are, you'll need help re-packaging most things you buy in order to prepare them to be sold. Are you ready for that? Where will you learn how to do it? Buy another product to teach you? Outsource it? More time, more money out of your pocket. 4.

Support - Have you ever joined a site, or bought a software package or physical product, and felt like you were trying to put together an entire houseful of assembly required furniture with nothing but the Indonesian instruction manual? (If you're fluent in Indonesian imagine it in Swahili) Is there support readily available to you, or does your guru you bought from either hide behind support processes, or send you to an alternate product to fix your problem? 5. MONEY, MONEY, MONEY - This is truly the kicker. How much can you budget for each month to purchase new products to market for yourself? $200? $500?

Chances are, even those numbers are high for a lot of people. Buying products and license to sell them is expensive. How much can you afford to invest? So, if shopping for myself isn't the easy way, what is???

I'm glad you asked The Easiest Way To Have Access To The Latest And Greatest Products Online is The Vault!
