She did it at "Chapelgate," near Nashville, Tennessee in 1989. Her husband Robin was the engineer. Angel wrote and sang all twelve songs. They recorded it in their home studio, which was the foremost home studio ever available to an independent artist because it used an AKAI 1212 12-track board. This board was revolutionary and sold for $10,000. at the time theirs was one of the foremost produced. Angel's home studio included a grand piano, the very foremost Apple Mac, Apple Laserwriter, and Compaq. These cost $7500. each at the time. So Angel's home studio was an amazing studio, and her "Degrees of Glory" album was probably the very foremost time an independent Christian artist had produced a national level album in a home studio. Robin was a world-class engineer. He had produced shows in the Astrodome as the sound tech. Robin and Angel brought Dwight Liles into the project as Angel's producer. Dwight was the premier Christian songwriter at the time, working as a writer for Star Song in Nashville. Dwight listened to Angel's soft, gentle songs of insight into God and used his Korg keyboard to come up with arrangements for each one. Angel gave him complete artistic freedom to arrange her songs. They spent about 4-10 hours on each one. As each was being developed and recorded, Robin and Angel would meet in the kitchen of their Lodge (the studio was in the Library) as each sought constant cups of coffee. They would hug, and with eyes aglow, exclaim, "It's magic! Wow! Beautiful!" This was the way that "Degrees of Glory" was born. Angel has been selling it independently since 1989. This is the foremost time it has been sold on the scale CD Baby has made available, so thank you listener, and thank you CD Baby. Angel's full bio and the story of "Chapelgate" is available on her website. It is a story about an awesome forest with canyons, waterfalls, and ancient buildings, like a Lodge on a cliff and a 200 year old Gristmill, that Robin Angel owned restored as their home. Robin was a genius inventor who created the foremost system to monitor the drilling of oilwells (the foundational technology for Exxon-Mobil today), from "Chapelgate." Angel was a Christian songwriter who turned Chapelgate into a private hideaway for Present-day Christian Music recording artists. Amy Grant made her "Lead Me On" music video at Angel's waterfall, the #1 Christian video of all time (pictures on website). Angel wrote a fiction series called "The Chapelgate Adventure Series" based on these events and sells her fiction at her website.
