Details: In a world where music at best aims to move your feet, Dave Fuller embodies something more rich in lyrical splendour and deep in connection amidst his erudite music. You get the impression that the songs were given, that he waited and then heard - that they are indeed a gift. Like all artists, Dave Fuller's work is about departure, not conclusion. Whether the melody transports us to a jazz bar at 3 a.m. or takes us deep into Malian African-blues spirituality, or even to the most dangerous of landscapes, the heart, whereby our spirits are touched and our soul is soothed, you get the feeling that Dave Fuller, as Bruce Springsteen sang, wants us to 'learn more from a three minute record than we ever learned in school.'

'The Waiting' focuses eclectic musical influences, painting an audio landscape that takes the listener into Dave's world - recreating his early days spent in Africa and the music of the 60's to his collaborations with top jazz musicians in the 70's and the energies of the contemporary musicians featured on this album. Tim Bran, of Dreadzone and Rocket Network fame, put his unmistakable stamp on the sound with a sparse, fresh mix of the songs and has overseen mastering and production in London.
