Singer songwriter folk singer with crossover appeal 12 MP3 Songs FOLK: Modern Folk, FOLK: Celtic Folk Details: To coincide with his album release Songs that chose me Richard Anderson completed a two week tour of the Beanscene outlets in Scotland. He followed that by a week performing in some London clubs including Leonards, Tommy Flynn's, Camden Town and The Comedy Pub in Oxenden St Now Richard is opening for Peter Bruntnell on July 20th at The Anchor Inn, Anchor Lane, Barcombe, Lewes, East Sussex BN8 5BS. This is a birthday bash for Mike Lance. Formerly based in Glasgow, Anderson left his hometown (Annan, Dumfriesshire) for the city again in 2000. As a member of the Glasgow Songwriters Club, Anderson developed as a performer and found favour with club audiences - being voted Best newcomer the following year. Set packed full of memorable songs Glasgow Songwriters Magazine. As well as playing everywhere that's anywhere (King Tuts Wah Wah Hut, Acoustic Affair, Nice n Sleazys, Stereo the list goes on), Anderson wasn't slow to come to the attention of radio producers either. The lyrics to his first single I'm not getting into conversation caught the attention of BBC Radio Scotland, leading to a live session on the station's Celtic Connections programme and subsequent record company interest. Beautiful Sounds just great - Mary Ann Kennedy, BBC Radio Scotland Despite more play on the Brand new Opry Show and being on the radar of the industry's movers and shakers, Anderson continued to plough his own solo/acoustic furrow. Introduced to David Scott, through the New Deal for Musicians Scheme, a creative partnership was forged which saw The Pearlfishers frontman produce the E.P. Just as I am which again found favour with producers on BBC Radio Scotland Tom Morton, and Iain Anderson joining the cause this time. Returning to his hometown in 2003 to finish writing Songs that chose me and with David Scott at the controls, Richard Anderson created a collection of twelve truly memorable tracks. Now living overlooking the Solway, he continues to gain consistent press coverage and earlier this year attracted the attention of Loose Records who stepped in with a record and publishing contract.
