She is a member of the acclaimed Juno-award winning Canadian band The Wailin' Jennys, and has performed at 100s of venues across the country including appearances on Garrison Keillors A Prairie Home Companion. She has performed with the renowned contemporary bluegrass band "The Wayfaring Strangers," and has appeared at venues including NPR's World Cafe, and Boston's Symphony Hall, sharing the stage with the Boston Pops Orchestra. In 2006, she recorded an eponymous album with the Boston-based group "Joy Kills Sorrow" a modern string band that finds it home in the cracks between bluegrass, jazz, old-time, and pop styles as well as a self-released EP Tell Me Tonight, a collection of original songs performed with her own Brooklyn-based outfit Heather and the Barbarians. Heathers rich, soulful, voice elegantly moves through numerous styles organically and with sincerity- A quality learned from some of her early influences disparate as Ray Charles, Bonnie Raitt, Joni Mitchell, and Chet Baker. Heathers newest project, The Heather Anne Band plans to record a full-length album of Heathers original songs and music this coming winter.
