Her debut album, "Ready Now" is a collection of original songs that will capture your heart with their compelling depth and beauty. Her songs manage to get stuck in your head almost immediately while somehow avoiding the clichés that can often plague pop music. Part of her ability to gracefully combine raw emotion with ear-pleasing melodies comes from Katie's own story, which is as surprisingly unique as her music. Katie started writing songs at the age of two. Her parents say that she spent hours picking out notes to new songs she would create. As she got a little older however, she started hiding her desire to sing, play, and write songs. When no one else was home, she would lock the doors, sit at the piano and play, absorbed in the music. She doesn't remember exactly why she started hiding her love for making music but songwriting became her secret. It wasn't until after college, while living at an orphanage in rural South Africa, that Katie picked up her first guitar. During her time at the orphanage Katie was both falling in love with her future husband as well as having her heart broken on a daily basis by the suffering around her. Music was her refuge. Everyday after working in the hospice, she would take her guitar and hike to the edge of the property, a secluded area where her only companions were grazing cows. She would spend hours playing and writing songs, daydreaming of a time when she would let others in on her secret. After moving back to the United States it was some time before she told anyone about her dream. In fact, she was married for a year before finally sharing her secret with her husband. The first song she sang for him is the title track of the album, Ready Now. The theme draws directly from Katie's experience of confronting her fears, embracing her dream, and bravely stepping into the spotlight to share that dream with others. At 26, it seems that all of Katies waiting in secret has paid off with a collection of songs that sparkle with unusual depth and clarity. Her captivating artistry is evident from start to finish but is always layered with a playfulness that makes her music fresh and fun and keeps the listener returning to her songs again and again.
