Details: Bruce Harding was born in Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, into a family which still believed in the time-honoured tradition of family music-making despite the increasing prevalence of television, stereo systems, and passive rather than active appreciation of music. A child of the manse, otherwise known as a "preacher's kid," he grew up in various communities around Alberta and British Columbia, learning instruments through the public school system, private lessons, and through sheer determination to teach himself, before quitting high school at 17 to go on the Guitar Pose road with a rock and roll band. Harding soon settled in the Vancouver area in the mid-1980s, worked his way through college and university playing in bar bands and other rock, jazz and classical ensembles, and earned various degrees, including a PhD in musicology in 1998 after a six-year stint in Toronto and smaller communities north of the city. Now living again on the South Coast of BC, Harding is constantly amazed that he has now been making music professionally for over 20 years across Canada and abroad, singing and playing a variety of flutes, acoustic guitar, electric bass and djembe. Harding is one of those rare people who bridges the gap between the sacred and the profane, creating instrumental and vocal music for people who thirst for musical and spiritual nourishment. Let Everything That Breathes, his recording of flute improvisations, both solo and accompanied, is a perfect example of music which speaks to the heart, regardless of belief or persuasion. Harding is an avid improviser, a lover of making music in the moment. He currently plays flutes with the Indo-Canadian/jazz fusion ensemble, Panj [panj.ca] and tours as bass player and vocalist with Canadian singer/songwriter, Linnea Good [linneagood.com].

Harding also writes and records music for the liberal church, releasing it in partnership with his wife Cheryl through their company, Evensong Worship Resources [evensong.ca].
