Environmentalist Carter arrives at a logging site to interview modern day loggers for his book. While he's anti-clear cutting, he finds he likes most of the loggers well enough. In fact he gets along with pretty much everyone but foreman Nate, who takes an instant dislike to him. They constantly butt heads, grating on each other at every opportunity. There's chemistry there, especially of the sexual kind, but both of them fight it as hard as they can. When a logger is injured in an accident and they're forced to work together to save him, though, Carter starts to realize Nate is just a guy doing his job. In fact, he starts to question his purpose at the logging camp in the first place. Can these two hot-headed guys set pride aside and make it work?
