

Kitsune - Lila Dubois

On the anniversary of Joe's mother's death he breaks his own rules and has a one night stand with an exotic stranger. Sakura is unlike any woman Joe's ever met: smart, beautiful, and very quirky. That's because Sakura isn't like any woman he's know before--she's not human. Sakura's a kitsune, a mystical Japanese fox who can take on the form of a woman, on a mission: help Joe discover his Japanese heritage and make peace with his past. They didn't say anything about falling in love with him... TO MY READER: I hope you enjoy Kitsune. This story was inspired by watching a friend struggle with her ethnic identity. Half Caucasian-half Japanese she grew up in middle-class suburbia with an ethnic name no one could pronounce, and at the age of 11 was taller than all her Japanese relatives, and her hair never turned blond-streaked in the summer like her friend's did. No sexy Japanese mythology character showed up to help her (and if one had I would have insisted he bring a friend for me) but it sure might have helped. This is also in honor of this same friend's Grandma (Hi Grandma Endo!) who still gives me a card with cash in it for my birthday. ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Lila lives in Southern California where she's working on her Masters degree in writing and currently resides in Hollywood, which provides an endless supply of exciting evenings and writing ideas. Having spent extensive time in France, Egypt and Turkey Lila speaks five languages, none of them (including English) fluently.
