Discover How To Overcome Your Fear Of Public Speaking, Hold Your Audience Spellbound, Empower People To Answer Your Offers Instantly... And Master It All In Just 3 Days! Forget everything you have been led to believe about public speaking. And forget what everyone else have told you, especially unhelpful opinions about yourself. If you have a strong desire to overcome stage fright, deliver high impact presentations that move your audience and convey your ideas more effectively, then keep reading. But if you want to stay in the comfort zone and continue walking in the shadows of other people, stay at the sidelines and watch your extrovert counterparts having the time of their life, I won't waste your time any further and I suggest you hit the BACK button. Still with me?... GOOD! Believe it or not, I can feel your inner pain and turmoil right now. The fact that you're still on this page now is because you can probably identify yourself to any of these scenarios: You are afraid to speak up You are tired of being outshined by people who seem to have a better way with words than you, and you often fall short in getting a job or a promotion You are in business that requires dealing with people - and that's just it. You're really afraid of dealing with people face-to-face! Your assignment or job requires you to speak to

many people Your opinions are not taken seriously because people around you find that you're timid or you just appear less important to them You don't enjoy yourself at parties often because you can't converse well and you're rarely the center of attention You are in the sales line and you're afraid of coming across as a 'hard selling' sales man The list can go on and on. I know you can identify with any one or more of these scenarios that's been playing before your eyes - over and over again - throughout your life. Up until now, that is. How Would You Like To Turn That Around And Start A New Life Without The Fear Of Speaking In Public Today? Please don't think im making fun of you. In fact, I see a lot of myself in everything I've just said. Just a few years ago, that is! You see, I was labeled an 'introvert' (and oh boy, how I hate that word!) by my school friends. I was timid and I was anxious in the company of many friends. I behaved rather odd at formal functions, and I was rather unpopular at parties. This is the reason why for the first half of my life, I didn't hang out much at clubs. So after I left school and got my first job, the same thing repeated. I wasn't chosen to represent my company in making speeches because I obviously sucked at speaking well in public. Not a surprise I didn't get my raise. I was sick and tired of being sick and tired of being pushed to the side lines and people taking me less seriously! I figured my problem was fear of public speaking. The common misconception is that this skill is needed only for stage talks. To me, it was more than that. And I figured that if I could conquer my ultimate fear that has been holding me back from achieving my peak potential, and the abundance of opportunities it cost me... .. I could very well salvage it all back! "Can You See What This Was Costing Me?" My public perception Career / business opportunities My friendships and relationships My self-respect Money Even time! (because I would procrastinate and hesitate before speaking up) It finally came down to a DO or DIE situation. Admittedly, it wasn't easy for me. Far from it. Reading books on the topic didn't help much because well, most of them made it sound so easy. Saying is one thing, doing is the other. I had to overcome trembling knees, racing heart beats, sweaty palms, and drips of sweat down my forehead. So I took on my first public speaking challenge with utter embarrassment. But I didn't stop because I had already been embarrassed too many times in my life, so what difference does an extra one more humiliating experience count for? Over time, the fear dissipated, I discovered new techniques to overcome them. Later on I escalated to higher techniques of captivating my audience, and even came as far as selling to them!
