

Freeland - A Social Anticipation - Theodor Hertzka

Theodor Hertzka, or Hertzka Tivadar was a late 19th century Hungarian-Austrian economist and journalist. In 1872 he became economic editor of the _Neue Freie Presse; and in 1874 he with others founded the Society of Austrian National Economists. Hertzka and a group of men founded the International Free Society to: "seek this solution in the establishment of a community on the basis of perfect liberty and economic justice--that is, of a community which, while it preserves the unqualified right of every individual to control his own actions, secures to every worker the full and uncurtailed enjoyment of the fruits of his labour." Freeland - A Social Anticipation describes this project and is an excellent source for understanding the structure of Hertzka's economic philosophy.
