"Some Like it Country" is a return to the tradition of America's great country music. It features a sound that takes one back to the time when country and western music was about the music and not the money. With Pat James, there won't be fancy light shows, smoke and loud guitars, but only the true, pure sound of country and western music the way it was and the way it should be. Pat employed the best in area musicians as well as a couple of hired guns from out of town. "Some Like it Country" has been produced by Pat James, engineered by Otto D'Agnolo and recorded at Chaton Studio in Phoenix. Here is what Otto has to say about it:"In a day when high tech wizardry has nearly replaced the need for talent in the creative process it's refreshing to find a singer / songwriter like Pat James. With Pat, we tracked the old fashion way. We used real live musicians all playing together at the same time and Pat actually sang the songs without the artificial processing equipment that many of today's top country singers use to get on pitch. He's the real deal and when you hear him live, he'll sound just like the record!" - Otto D'Agnolo, Emmy award winning producer /engineer /writer (Credits include: Glen Campbell, Kenny Rogers, Waylon Jennings...)
