The euphonium jumps into Mozart's world, to celebrate his anniversary with 'new' and original works presented by this popular virtuoso and one of Austria's best known brass ensembles. 12 MP3 Songs CLASSICAL: Orchestral, CLASSICAL: Traditional Details: Celebrating the 250th anniversary of his birth in 2006, with the title "Brassin' Mozart", this musical project provides us with new opportunities to understand the classical music of Vienna. Mozart for brass players is a logical, innovative continuation of classical tradition and at the same time creates a new way of looking at the harmonic and melodic features of Mozart's music. Technical brilliance, in its traditional form, and melodic beauty is conveyed particularly well through the solo euphonium part. Mozart himself hardly had any opportunity to make use of brass players in his music as a result of technical deficiencies, such as a lack of brass instruments. The arrangements and new composition in this CD form a logical continuation of classical music and allows it to permeate into the sounds of brass in the 21st century. BIOGRAPHY Steven Mead Englishman Steven Mead (B.1962) needs no introduction to brass enthusiasts around the world as his playing and teaching have become known to virtually all who have a love for the instrument known as the euphonium. Many commentators suggest it is Stevens vocal background (from the age of 6) that is responsible for the truly unique beauty of his euphonium tone. The rich expressive approach to musical performance has been admired by professional musicians around the world and as a result Steven is performing increasingly with orchestras and chamber ensembles in addition to brass and wind bands. His concerts and recitals are hallmarked by a unique communication between artist and audience. Quotes Howard Snell Conductor, former Principal trumpet London Symphony Orchestra: In the parallel universe of brass-world Steven Mead is a celebrity. He amazes, astonishes and astounds afresh with each recording or concert appearance. He continually renews and invigorates his repertoire and never fails to offer something novel to the public. He never lets his fans down. Steven's years on the road, the constant search for new repertoire, a teaching role where no trouble is too much, all of these things go well beyond that of being merely a great performer, of which there are quite a few, and take him into the position only the blinkered would contest: his world-wide role as the euphonium's foremost ambassador. Brass Bulletin: when he puts the mouthpiece to his lips, you know instantly that you are in the presence of an extraordinary musician. The Gramophone: The music immediately impresses on the listener Mead's talent as a musician and communicator. Mead's lyricism is simply a joy to behold. Brass Band World: A standing ovation coaxed Steven back on stage, and completely unaccompanied, gave the audience a virtuostic performance almost beyond belief. The crowd were enthralled. British Bandsman: His recital was a tour de force of flawless technique, incredible virtuosity and a refined and appropriate sense of good taste and true musicianship. T.U.B.A. Journal: What better way to end a concert by an essentially British tradition (brass band) than a performance by the unquenchable Steven Mead? Following a flawless performance of Golland's Concerto for Euphonium and Band, Mead stole the show with his encore arrangement of Rule Britannia. ITEA Journal: I cannot remember the last time I had so much fun listening to a euphonium recording. With a potpourri of music Steve again reveals why he continues to be in amazing demand as one of the world's premiere brass soloists.
