Huber offers a stunning collection of songs on Seagull, his sophomore solo effort, and fourth album overall including his continuing work with critically acclaimed guitar-pop band The Gecko Club. From the opening note of Lonely Heartache Song to the gentle fade of Stronger Light, the album offers 13 songs that are drenched with two elements that are missing in scores of albums released each year -- heart and spirit. Seagull highlights Andrew D. Hubers commitment to his craft. The songs are sharply arranged, smartly performed, and expertly hit the tug-of-war-of-life note the songwriter is known to angle toward. Highlights of the album include the melancholic beauty of Union Station, the Irish Pub howl of One More Round, and the longing affection of Greatest Success. Andrew D. Hubers first solo offering (2003s Ten Songs from the Side Room) garnered impressive critical comparisons to both James Taylor and Dan Fogelberg. With its folk-rock leanings, "Seagull" may very well poise Andrew D. Huber to get his own place on the Copperline. 2008 NorthLight Records
