Their second emprise-accomplished in co-operation with producer Felizol (Yiannis Veslemes) - goes by the name of Timemachine and is released by Inner Ear. Thirteen tracks that blend various music styles beckon the listener to a time travel through the discharge of human compulsion. Mary and the Boy leave behind their intensely dramatic and burlesque features, daring an experiment that incorporates the principals of modern electronic sound aided by expert Cristian Vogel in mastering. The homemade aesthetic, Marys crude voice and the Boys piano-playing meet and eventuate in a less dark outcome. The plainly scary mood of their debut has faded and is superseded by pop melodies expressed in a new-wave manner , indicated in tracks like No more bad trips for little Mary and Are you still dancing can can?.As expected, raw and noisy patterns are not absent in this album, with Mary and the Boy diving into the far-out world of tracks Cock and Death. Timemachine is a demanding album, that needs to lend an ear in order to reach its core. The pervasive authenticity and creativeness that rise to prominence through the 13 compositions in this record will make it one of the most worth mentioning albums of 2009!
