In the Pool is a prime example. This album makes smooth transitions through a number of genres. But after listening to Jenn's music, you start to wonder, "Who needs genres anyway?" Call it folk, blues, jazz - let's just call it what it is: fantastic music. Adams is assisted by a number of talented artists on this album. There's Steve Conn playing the Hammond B3 to Rod McGaha's trumpet and everything in between. They are tastefully incorporated adding a shine to Adams already well written material. Compiled mostly of originals, In the Pool also features a few great covers. The moods evoked from song to song range from ambient primal sounds inspired by a turbulent country, to the simple, sweet elegance of a woman in her garden. Adams clearly possesses a rare ability to lay down a story. She channels the essence of being human and keenly presents it. Her unforced lyrics and impressive chops add a weight to her tunes that's hard to match. After hearing one of her songs, you get that same feeling of having just read a good book. This album contains both diversity and consistency that provides a settled comfort. In the Pool makes you feel at home. "If you haven't seen Adams play, you're missing one of lifes greatest pleasures, from the first note of the opening song, she has you hanging on her every word." - Greg Tressel, Rogue Theatre Productions "Lots of artists attempt to fashion a thoughtful blend of folk, blues and jazz, but few do it better than Jenn Adams...Writes passionate songs that brim with confidence, elegance and restraint. Centered on her own acoustic guitar, the arrangements on In The Pool are then colored with splashes of accordion, harmonica and horns, along with electric guitar, bass and drums. Showcases the subtle power of her singing...but it's Adams' original songs that make her an artist to watch." -Performing Songwriter Magazine
