Details: Two worlds, one artist To say Ember Swifts new project entitled Lentic is a case where East meets West may be a cliché, but there is nothing stale about this bold and beautiful CD. In fact. Lentic is a refreshing step in a new direction electronic music meets folk and is truly a sonic representation of two countries: China and Canada. This folktronica project is both organic (acoustic and traditional) and electronic (beats and grooves). Lentic features Chinese instrumentation (specifically the guzheng), lyrics in both Mandarin and English, and, consistent with Ember Swifts musical outpourings, several tips of the hat to diverse styles and musical eras within the arrangements. Lentic truly reflects a new global reality of cultural exchange, and particularly China, a country that embodies the collision between East and West, ancient and modern. Working with producer Tim Rideout of FibiiSonic Studio in Montreal while she was living in Beijing, Embers exploration of her newly adopted country is reflected in her investigation of genuinely new musical forms. The result is a highly original blend that contains elements that will be familiar and eye-opening to both Eastern and Western listeners. Embers luminous voice singing in English and Mandarin provides the link that ties and unifies the songs together, as well as providing sheer pleasure to any music fan. Well known as an articulate and frequently topical songwriter, Ember lets Lentic's music do the talking more than on any of her other nine recordings. That's not to say the lyrics here are devoid of substance. Quite the contrary. The songs cover territory as vast as the two countries she calls home, from the suicide of a good friend (What Were You Thinking?) to a love song to China (So Nice) to the prospect of human extinction as part of the evolution of the planet (Hollowed Bones). However, in a song such as Thats Right/Jiu Shi, the trippy music starts off as contemporarily as Twitter before the entrance of the traditional guzheng, crunchy rock guitar and Embers gorgeous jazzy vocals delight the listener to a Zen expression of minimalist lyrics: This is exactly the kind of music..this is exactly who I am. The effect contextualizes Embers voice (and lyrics) as an instrument that is but one part (albeit a key part) of the aural portrait Lentic paints. In a world of musical clichs, Lentic is exactly the kind of music that rewards discerning fans , and Ember Swift remains exactly who she is: an extraordinary artist producing extraordinary work.  Lentic Lentic Lentic-- ()() Lentic() Lentic FibiiSonic StudioTim Rideout Lentic ()()() Thats Right TwitterJazzI ()() Lentic
