Parents will find themselves singing along to 'Grumpy Bum' and 'Pack Up Time' and no one will complain when CAVE BABY is asked for repeatedly - which it will be. Kindred Magazine Dec 2008 Got little kids? Prefer rockin' hillbilly to Dorothy the Dinosaur? Local cowpokes Sherry Rich and Rick Plant hit the right balance of gutbucket and nappy bucket to give the holiday road trip a blast of singalong country swing. The Age Melbourne Australia The Mudcakes have shown me how so very wrong I am about what children's music can be like. Cave Baby is amazing. It's more than bearable! Tolerability was going to be my marker of excellence here. I was going to suggest that if I still have a foot at the end of an hour of songs for kids, then the record is amazing. Indeed I didn't even think about sawing my foot off! So, as such, I've thrown that out the window. This, Cave Baby, is my new marker for excellence. Listening to Cave Baby actually made me a little bit clucky. Which is strange, I'm not really one of those people! Perhaps I'm just looking for an excuse to listen to Shortnin Bread. I fear that some of these songs are going to make their way into my regular playlist and I'm going to have to explain to my friends why tracks like Grumpy Bum, Please Don't Polka The Baby and I Am A Sock feature so heavily therein. If you think I'm just being glib here, you're really wrong. The songs are pretty impressive and catchy. Cave Baby has an amazing array of genres woven in - rockabilly, surf, reggae, bluegrass. The Mudcakes, Sherry Rich and Rick Plant, are inarguably deft musicians and lyricists. Rick has played with the likes of Emmylou Harris and The Audreys. Such is this pairs talent that its almost cruel to consider theirs as music for children, under the genre childrens music. This whole experience has proved to me the power of marketing and nag power. If the Wiggles didnt have such massive clout in the market, its almost certain that parents wouldnt subject themselves to it. Instead, they would and should, be listening to The Mudcakes with their family. Steph Maker - Dwarf.com.au - Jan 2009
