Even from the beginning, things were difficult for H. Troy. By the age of 12, Hector was a ward of the state where he spent time bouncing from foster home to foster home. He sums up this time in his life in the song Got Em Like when he says; Mother didnt want me and Daddy was MIA. In the midst of this difficult time, Hector turned to the comfort of a melody and found that he had a gift for music. In his early teens, H. Troy began to perform at local talent competitions in the Hartford, Connecticut area where he became a crowd favorite. While at a competition at the University of Connecticut, Hector met up with an R B group named 21 Summit. He handed the group their first talent competition defeat and in return became a member of the quartet. Hector performed extensively on the east coast as a lead singer of the group for two years. When the group disbanded in 2004 H. Troy began pursuing his career as a solo artist. Soon after striking out on his own, Hector Troy entered himself in the 2006 Connecticut IDOL competition in West Hartford, CT. A single face in a sea of thousands Hectors sultry yet powerful voice put him in the forefront of the judges minds. Hector Troy was eventually crowned Connecticut IDOL. Soon after, Hector signed a multi-media contract with Blak Box Music Group. It was at Blak Box that Hector was reunited with Former Band-mate/Producer Ken Aniken Quesnel and Former Producer/Engineer Jason ShoNuff Valencia. H. Troy began writing and recording his debut album The Ballad of Hector Troy in February of 2007. Throughout The Album you will hear traces of his influences which include; Stevie Wonder, Usher, Donnell Jones, Boyz II Men, Mario, Justin Timberlake, Mariah Carey, Jay-Z, and Eminem.
