Saturnshine initially began as a side project for Christian Mesiano during the winter of 1998. It provided a vehicle for his love of early 80s new wave pop and early 90s dream pop as well as environmental soundscapes, ambient music and film scoring. In 1999, the first self-titled Saturnshine EP was recorded. Shortly thereafter, Saturnshine was put on hold to work on several other band related projects. In 2001, the second Saturnshine EP, Tomorrows City, Today, was recorded. Once again, Christian began playing guitar in another band. After that fizzled out, like they all usually did, it was finally time to make Saturnshine his main musical project. His wife, Melodie, with whom he had already collaborated with in a few other bands, was now officially brought in to play bass and sing. On their recently completed debut album, "Before It's Too Late", Saturnshine takes you on a blissful journey filled with beautiful melodies, atmospheric guitar textures and lush male/female vocals.
