Details: "Combine the soundtrack of a made-for-TV horror movie with the music of Bartok and Copeland, mix in doses of lyrical beauty and impressionistic/jazz chord progressions, sprinkle generously with the sweet and sour flavors of humor and rage, sift out the barlines and traditional key signatures, then pour it all into a structure that is both logical and free flowing and you get the uniquely American sound of Erik Rurik Satie." Don't try to understand the CD by filtering it through your past understanding of what you think music should sound like, but let its own logic unfold and express itself in its own terms.
