Thoughtful, unpredictable pop that can't color inside the lines 18 MP3 Songs POP: Beatles-pop, FOLK: Folk Pop Details: ABOUT THE HARMONICA POCKET: The Harmonica Pocket is all about intelligent, outside-the-box pop songs for people who think for themselves. At the core of the Harmonica Pocket are the mature, swinging tunes of Keeth Monta Apgar (acoustic wah-wah guitar, harmonica, words) whose thick jazz chord progressions and unpredictable changes offer a refreshing twist on today's commercial pop music. Both live and in the studio, the Harmonica Pocket is made up of a rotating caste of musicians including Lorne Watson (half drum kit / half congas percussion), Jon Ryser (alto saxophone), Nala Walla (vocal harmony), as well as many other untraditional sounds. The Harmonica Pocket's 2005 release is a collaboration between 25 different musicians and a handful of visual artists. ALBUM DESCRIPTION: "Birds Falling from the Sky" is an 18 track concept album by Seattle performance and recording project The Harmonica Pocket. Released in August 2005, the record is an eclectic, unpredictable tally of genre-crossing tunes. From the experimental opening soundscape "Last night i saw" into "Earth over air" a folk-reggae track spliced with voicemail excerpts; OR from the lo-fi record player blues on "Bag of never" to the beatlesque epic pop song "The stars are all out" -- song after song after song the Harmonica Pocket consistently takes musical risks and effortlessly colors outside the lines of commercial music.
